

SUPPORTING ORGANISATION

CIWEM

The Chartered Institution of Water and Environmental Management (CIWEM) is an independent professional body and a registered charity, advancing the science and practice of water and environmental management for a clean, green and sustainable world.

- Thousands of members in nearly 100 countries, working within local authorities, water companies, regulatory bodies, governments, universities and the private sector;
- Supports local professionals throughout the world, represents members in international forums and has established international branches, including Hong Kong and Bulgaria;
- Provides training and professional development qualifications;
- Promotes excellence in environmental management through a portfolio of awards;
- Provides a forum for debate through conferences, technical meetings, networking opportunities, policy statements, magazines and journals;
- Supplies independent advice to governments, academic institutions, the media and the general public;
- Works with international organisations and NGOs, such as the EU, the UN and Water Aid;
- Honorary Fellows include Sir David Attenborough, broadcaster Chris Baines, Chairman of the Environment Agency Sir John Harman, the Director of the Black Environment Network Judy Ling Wong, Jonathon Porritt, Baroness Barbara Young and Tim Smit of the Eden Project.

CIWEM believes that sustainable development should be achieved through innovation and knowledge sharing. To accomplish this, CIWEM has strong regional, national and international networks that socialise, share expertise and promote technical excellence. CIWEM holds over 250 diverse conferences and events each year, covering topics such as World Wetlands Day, drought, air quality, biosolids, the Water Framework Directive and climate change. All conferences contribute to delegates' continuing professional development (CPD) and provide an excellent opportunity to meet the key players in environmental management.

CIWEM knows that the protection of our environment depends on encouraging and developing the talent of those in the industry, and so helps aspiring graduates gain the knowledge and experience they need to succeed. CIWEM provides a unique source of environmental career information via the regularly updated website: www.environmental-careers.info

CIWEM's popular magazine, WEM, has a growing circulation of 12,000 and covers subjects such as flood risk management, eco-fashion, the Olympics, water wars, waste management, international restoration programmes and environmental entrepreneurs. This is supplemented by our technically focused e-newsletter, our peer-reviewed Water and Environment Journal, and our annual publication, The Global Environment.

Each year, CIWEM's portfolio of awards honour projects and people making outstanding contributions to environmental management from around the world, whilst the Young Members' Award gives us a glimpse into the future of the profession. Winning a CIWEM award and being featured in WEM is one of the most effective ways for professionals and organisations to stand out from the crowd and make an impression on the environmental industry.
